ONE TEXTBOOK A MONTH IS NEW PLAN MAKING ITS DEBUT AT ZP SCHOOLS

Zilla Parishad CEO's proposal will see students from 26 schools lose their heavy backpacks, carry select chapters from all subjects.

It's a lesson no school seems to have quite learnt for years on end — the ever-increasing burden of school bags lugged around by its budding scholars. But now, these dismal scenes of children carrying heavy backpacks every day may soon be a thing of the past, thanks to the ingenious proposition of an Indian Administrative Service (IAS) officer at the top of the Zilla Parishad's ranks.

According to the proposal put forth by Pune ZP chief executive officer (CEO) Suraj Mandhare, his stratagem involves improvising the textbooks of school students to include only the syllabus for any given month. As a result, each month, the students have one new textbook containing all the required chapters for that duration of time — significantly reducing the weight of books they are required to carry.

While this experiment will be tested out only on ZP schools for the moment, Mandhare plans to expand it to more institutes across the city and state in the upcoming academic year.

Explaining his initiative, Mandhare told Mirror, "It's a true pity to witness small children carry such huge bags to school and back every day. We cannot change the curriculum overnight; but, improvising the textbooks is not that difficult. As per the plan and design we have made, the new books will carry sections of each subject required to be covered in a specific month. So, the students will literally only have to bring one book to school — and this will include monthly chapters for all subjects. Furthermore, each month, the kids will get new textbooks as per the monthly teaching plan. Our aim is that this reduces the weight of their backpacks to a large extent."

Several parents greeted the move with open arms. Salini Muraleedharan, the parent of a student at the Akshara International School in Pimpri-Chinchwad, said, "Nowadays, many schools have personal racks and lockers for students to keep their books in the school itself. As a result, not all the children have to lug around very heavy bags. However, there are also a host of schools that do not have the luxury of such facilities, especially those under the ZP. For them, this is definitely an excellent initiative. Kids need to be spared the burden of heavy backpacks, and any move to bolster that is most welcome."

Others, however, demurred. Seema Pradeep, a teacher of the Rosary School chain, shared, "Carrying heavy school bags on a daily basis is surely a distressing experience for students. However, not carrying all textbooks also causes inconveniences on several levels for both teachers and students. For instance, if some exercises and activities from upcoming chapters need to be worked on spontaneously, it will be difficult to access them. I think books should not be restricted to just a chapter or two from each subject. In my opinion, segregating them term-wise would work better."

Responding to these challenges, Mandhare admitted, "Being unable to access chapters from previous months or not being able to look at future syllabus content is a challenge that comes with the improvisation we have planned. To battle this, I am trying to make sections of these textbooks detachable, so that chapters to be carried can be customised as per the convenience of the teacher."

Starting January 26, the initiative will be rolled out on an experimental basis for three months. With two schools picked from each of the 13 talukas under the ZP, a total of 26 schools will be a part of the trial run. "We are taking baby steps to eradicate this major daily struggle faced by little ones. Carrying such heavy bags at a tender age has gruesome consequences in the long run. Our experimental textbooks will be distributed to Class V students from select ZP schools. To make the process seamless, they will be made detachable. The basic idea is to make the student carry just one essential book to school," Mandhare summed up.

The core accretion model

Approximately 4.6 billion years ago, the solar system was a cloud of dust and gas known as a solar nebula. Gravity collapsed the material in on itself as it began to spin, forming the sun in the center of the nebula.

With the rise of the sun, the remaining material began to clump up. Small particles drew together, bound by the force of gravity, into larger particles. The solar wind swept away lighter elements, such as hydrogen and helium, from the closer regions, leaving only heavy, rocky materials to create smaller terrestrial worlds like Earth. But farther away, the solar winds had less impact on lighter elements, allowing them to coalesce into gas giants. In this way, asteroids, comets, planets, and moons were created.

Earth's rocky core formed first, with heavy elements colliding and binding together. Dense material sank to the center, while the lighter material created the crust. The planet's magnetic field probably formed around this time. Gravity captured some of the gases that made up the planet's early atmosphere.
